Rebalancing Act

By CHRIS CHUMBLEY

PROBLEM

Chris and Becky Hall wanted to update their Colleyville home's master bath. They wanted a design that would flow and have continuity with the rest of the home's interior.

SOLUTION

The first thing USI Remodeling proposed was to architecturally rebalance the space. Now, the master closet has an open ceiling sharing a common vaulted ceiling to the remaining bathroom, all separated by a common wall.

The new design consists of arch brows over the vanity cabinets tying into newly constructed shower walls opposite the original over-weighted side of the room. This created quite a few opportunities. It increased storage in the upper vanity cabinets below the brows, allowing the cabinet tops to be clutter-free. Also, the shower's luxurious dual showerheads, rain head and handheld faucet were easy to position for maximum effect.

The semi-formal feel of the room is enhanced with custom-made mahogany cabinets featuring roll-out trays and felt-lined jewelry drawers. Opposite the vanities is a built-in ironing center with linen storage that looks like a piece of furniture with travertine slabs on the countertop to heighten its elegance.

The homeowners now can begin any day on heated tile floors or end a day soaking in their tub enjoying the flat-screen TV/audio system.
